Student killed

By William Randolph Hurts

A University student was fatally wounded Wednesday when he was attacked by a giant boll weevil near the "Grease Shack."

According to Clod Overlouse of campus social security, the student was walking from his morning class when the tragedy occurred. Security officers could not find a motive for the slaying.

"No, we can't explain it, son," one officer said, "and for God's sake, don't, I repeat, don't print the victim's name! Please, I warn you! We have not contacted the next of kin."

Hey toots!

The victim was John N. ("Cotton") Patch, 21, a junior agriculture major. He was described by close friends as being "the strong, silent type" who always wore 100 per cent cotton clothes.

"His quietness," Overlouse reported, "was apparently the reason that other students didn't hear the poor fellow's yell for help — he didn't yell."

Social security officers appeared disgusted because of the ruckus the accident caused. "I know I saw at least 10 students parking in the faculty parking spaces this morning," one complained, "Now how am I going to find time to ticket them? It just isn't fair."

A group of students tried to assist Patch as he was being attacked but were unsuccessful. The students did not remove the bug, however, because, according to one tearful coed, "no one had a fly swatter big enough."

A 'subhead'

Patch's body was released to a local funeral home. The bug's body, though, disappeared mysteriously and left social securities guards and police investigators puzzled.

Several students have told the Almajoke, however, that the bug was killed by two females with white aprons on and dragged into the back door of the "Grease Shack."

It was not known what eventually happened to the creepy crawler, but hamburger prices for Pickup Food Services dropped 20 cents late in the week.

The appearance of the oversized weevil, at least 1000 times larger than any known species, was somewhat a mild surprise to many of the students and faculty.

Never read 'subheads'

There was much speculation about exactly where the bug came from. Some blamed the appearance on angry farmers whose cotton crops, because of a ban on DDT, have been ravished by boll weevils.

But several students claimed the weevil was the result of mutation experiments being conducted by a senior biology major, Marcus Absent.

According to those students and several faculty members, Absent, also affectionately known as "Igor," was conducting the experiments in a biology lab after class. The exact reasons for the experiments were not known.

"He always liked those filthy bugs," one faculty member told the Almajoke, "and he was always muttering something about 'ruling the world' or something like that. A real weirdo, if you know what I mean."

Almost a 'subhead'

Another teacher added, "He was a student who would go to the library, and get this, to actually study, not socialize. You don't see many like that." "Marcus who?" another added.

The murder caused a minor sensation on campus and several students lashed out at the administration because of the incident.

Your underwear is on fire

Several of the more vocal students spoke at the newly-opened Free Speech Alley. A major rally was called Thursday and attended by three interested students.

"We've warned the students about their rights being violated," one student said in a keynote speech, "Now there is concrete proof — the administration is actually bugging the students!"

Changes slip by

By Paul Hervay

New policies directly affecting students and additional course offerings have recently been announced by University officials.

The reason cited for the changes and additions was that "the need was finally seen by the administration after many long years of work, study and pondering of the ridiculous demands of students," according to a steadfast Almajoke source.

All classes will now start at 11 a. m. instead of the usual 8 a. m. This was determined by a random survey conducted by the BSU. The report, which literally fell into the hands of this reporter reinforced the decision by stating that "most students prefer to sleep-off their hangovers in their own beds, rather than in the classroom."

All Colleges of the University have reduced the number of credit hours to graduate. Three courses in a student's major field and one elective of the student's choice will be the minimum and maximum hours required by every College. This, of course, is a waiting the prestigious approval and accreditation by the Southern Association of Lower Learning.

Also announced was that most college administrators and department heads will be replaced by their efficient secretaries next semester. A source close to the situation blamed the cutback on inflation.

An additional 555 parking spaces have been allotted for the faculty and staff. Although this is a time of faculty cutback, it was felt that more spaces were needed because of the complaining of certain members that their hair was getting messed up going to and from their cars. Students will have to park in the gravel pit till further notice, according to Social Security officials.

Student's Affairs gave the final plans on the new University Center. It will contain a massage parlor operating around the clock to provide services to all university students. Also a wet bar will be available for student uses but will have to replace the much proposed Olympic swimming pool. Due to student demands it was decided to delete all corridors, bathrooms and closets to beat the high rate of inflation. In regards to bathrooms, Jimminy Cricket, vice chancellor for student's affairs, implied that needy students could relieve themselves at various and sundry dog trots to be landscaped with the new building.

In regards to the deferred student loan program — it has been cancelled due to the fact that most university students are not "needy enough" according to standards set forth by a committee consisting of 48 faculty members and 1 student, an office source further explained.

Beginning this summer the University will feature "pay as you go" toilets. Chancellor Didn't He Slip feels this will be quite beneficial for students, although some SGA officials have expressed the concern and desire for "pay as you leave" toilets. Chancellor Slip added that the first policy is the most feasible, for some student might find themselves locked in without any change and would miss a class!

Chancellor Slip also commented on the tremendous growth of the University. He said that students could just look at the Sycamore trees outside in the mall — they have probably grown over two feet this semester due to the constant flooding of the well-graded campus and other university actions. Also it was pointed out that most students came to the University single and alone in life, but most left with a child or two and still single. Truly remarkable phenomena for such an academic-orientated institution.

An investigative reporter on the Almajoke staff found out from a conversation overheard during a three-hour coffeebreak by members of the Sociology department the growth of the University trees, etc. is attributed to extensive and increased fertilization. One line overheard was that Building and Maintenance has delivered more than 25 in the past week. In regard to the establishment of a Day Care Center, the chancellor said, "H——, I guess we'll have to have one now."

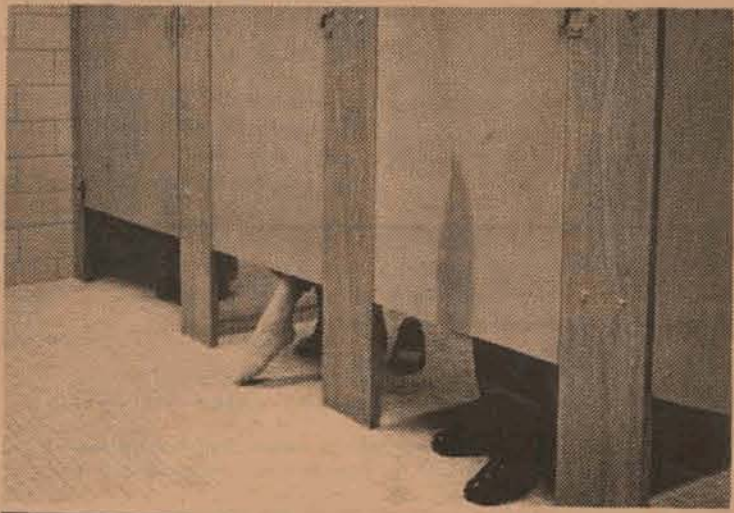

New course offerings will include such specialties as a speech course, "How To Talk To Your Dog," a journalism course entitled "How To Libel And Get Away With It," and a Library Science course called "Hating Books."

The English department told of a seminar to be held this summer in the state of Alaska. Students will be required to camp out for two months in order to be lectured to by a noted and learned penguin emeritus.

The Office of Inferences and Institutes will offer also a nine-week program on "Stuffing Foosball Machines." There is no charge for the course since copies of the Almajoke will be used for the stuffing.

New Psychology course offerings include "Sex With College Students," "Sex With Your Boy (Or Girl) Next Door," and "Sex With Your Teachers" or "How To Make A's In College Without Studying."

And to you students who could never find the "open door" to the Administrative Offices, we have good news — the doors have all been removed off their hinges so as to allow students to come and go at their own whims. The doors will be used as dining tables in the elegant and richly-appointed new University Center.

Starting this semester, such scenes as the one caught above will be abruptly curtailed because of the new administrative policy of "pay as you go" toilets. See story above for further sensational yellow journalism details. (Photo: All Mighty Reb)

Graduation moved

By Chicken Scoop

The University Commencement Club has announced that graduation ceremonies have been moved to the runway of the Shreveport Municipal Airport to accommodate thousands of area residents expected to attend the historic event.

"It was tough, getting the airline officials to stop the three flights for the day so we could have the runway," said Jim Beam, chairman of the club. Changes in the date and time have also been announced.

"We decided that 3 a. m. on May 5 would fit most people's schedules" Beam said, adding that although the ceremony was scheduled during the week of finals, the club committee insured the time wouldn't interfere with anyone's tests.

Students not attending ceremonies may pick up diplomas in the Regisdrawer's Office after submitting affidavits signed by both of their parents, a police officer, a medical specialist, two lawyers and a Sunday School teacher verifying that the absence was a valid one.

Letters to the editor:

To the editor,

Having gone over the platform of the SGA Presidential candidates, I have come to the conclusion that none of them will really serve the students' needs.

For this reason, I have decided to start a write-in campaign for that great fighter for student rights, Hiram Smithmatter.

Upon close examination it is obvious that Smithmatter is the only likely candidate for this honored (?) position.

While other candidates quibble about whether or not to abolish the senate, Smithmatter has come up with a solution that would really solve the students' problems, abolish the administration! This is the only real way to make this a truly student-oriented university.

While other candidates will settle for just a coke machine in the Liberal Arts building, Smithmatter says let's put them in every classroom along with candy, gum and beer machines. He also wants to put in beds for the students who sleep in class.

Let's turn away from the issues and look at Smithmatter the man. He is a seventh semester freshman majoring in General Studies with a minor in Pre-Med. In his 6 years at the University, Hiram has been an active member of the Clean Up the Bathroom Graffiti Association and has served as president of D.O.M. (Deserters of Military)

With these qualifications and his great platform it is easy to see that Smithmatter is the only candidate for us.

Hiram Smithmatter

To the editor:

Why can't something be done about the price of beer being dispensed by the machines in the Faculty Lounge of the LA Building?

I feel badly enough sneaking around to get my beer from an unauthorized source, but getting ripped to the tune of $.20 per can torques my jaws, too. Why does it cost $.20 in the LA Building and only $.15 in the Science Building? It isn't too much of a hassle when the weather is decent, but I don't appreciate having to go out into the elements to save a nickel.

Dee Tees

(Editor's note: Your problem was presented to the SGA in last week's meeting. After a four-hour debate, the senate adopted the proposal submitted by SGA president Tony Slanders, i.e., to raise the price in each building to $.75 per can and channel the difference to the SGA travel fund. A rider to the proposal provided for reduced lighting in the hallways near the faculty lounges to make it easier for students to gain undetected access.

However, when the package was sent across the mall, the Canceled (Oops, Chancellor) squashed the whole deal. The beer has been removed from all machines and is stacked in the Women's restroom in the Grease Shack. The machines have been thrown into the mud holes to the south of the new parking lots to serve as refuge for the marine life.)

To the editor:

Well I hope this letter, if it even gets in, is not butchered up, dear censor, because I have something very important to say to each and every one of you going to this school.

By now I'm sure you've all heard of the death of "Cotton" Patch by a mysterious giant boll weevil. Well, my dear fellow students, that is just a mild sign of things to come.

You see, the bug was not, you understand, just a fluke, a freak of nature. Every afternoon I've been in the biology lab working, sweating, slaving over my wonderful little bugs, hoping, one day, to be able to create....

And now I have done it. I have created a species of giant, man-eating boll weevils that are my very own. The entire university is in my power! You are my slaves!

For years I've attended this university, taken dozens of classes, eaten hundreds of hamburgers, and still none of you will be my friends. I sit at home each weekend watching shows like "Hee Haw" and "Police Surgeon." Nobody sits next to me in class or lets me borrow notes. All because I have a few pimples on my face (I just love chocolate) and a small wart on my chin.

Well now, you all will be sorry. Finally it will be a perfect, neo-communist, fascist-capitalist, fastidiously fresh, "you deserve a break today" world.

All of it will be mine, to have and rule! That is, if I am able to graduate this spring.

Heil weevil!

Marcus Absent

To the editor:

Student government has had a long and illustrious reign on this campus — one that we as senators have been rightly proud of.

Campaigning during a student election has generally been rather quiet and unobtrusive. In fact, many students vote without ever seeing or hearing the candidates — something we can all take credit for.

But the Almajoke has changed all that.

Last week, you had the unmitigated gall to run pictures and platforms of the candidates in your shallow sheets. You have violated our Constitutional Rights to remain silent and private.

As if that isn't enough, your noxious newspaper endorsed US as the best candidates. Thanks a lot, you journalistic jerks — our campaign is ruined.

Students munch in protest

Guard called in

Grady Muckraker

Students at the University in the past year have grown into a more cohesive, unified body and from all indications the wave of student activism, prevalent on many college campuses during the 1960s, is here at last. While university administrators certainly have cause for some alarm, the Almajoke does not believe the situation merits calling in the National Guard.

The Almajoke learned through reformed sources that National Guardsmen, dressed in plain clothes, have been placed under the command of Campus Social Security Officer Clod Overlouse. According to the source, Overlouse is maintaining contact with the guardsmen by way of two-way radio, while hovering over the University in a one-man remote-controlled helicopter. After learning of the occupation by the troops, the Almajoke informed the SGA, and then questioned several University administrators to determine why the troops were called in.

Chancellor Didn't He Slip said he considered recent student activities a threat to his position. But, "The last straw came when about 25 students occupied the Grease Shack during last Tuesday's noon hour," he said.

Vice Chancellor for Financial Affairs Iwanto Howl said that the students broke a University regulation which prohibits them from purchasing food in the Grease Shack without a current immunization card.

According to both Slip and Howl, the students were asked to disperse, but refused saying they wished to continue eating their lunch. Slip said Overlouse's efforts to evacuate the indigested students were met with belches and drools. The Guard was then called in.

Jeminy Cricket, student's affairs vice chancellor, told the Almajoke the guardsmen were needed to protect the rights of the administration and accused the student body of "meddling in affairs that don't concern them." Citing recent Election Board statistics, Cricket said more than seven per cent of the student body voted in the last SGA election.

The figure was unacceptable because the administration could not tolerate more than 6.99 per cent of the student populace voting in any one election, he added. Besides, Cricket chirped, "I'm not so sure students should elect SGA officials at all."

Vice Chancellor for Remedial Affairs Gary Bra-Zier said that students have increasingly violated University regulations by placing their bubble gum in University water fountains and under their desks, writing obscene poetry in University restrooms, and by gathering in groups of three or four in the mall.

Almajoke believes that the alleged violations are trivial and the action taken by the administration totally unwarranted. While sympathetic to their problems in running a large University, we cannot tolerate armed intervention. Students can only hope that negotiations now going on between the administration and SGA are successful. However, we strongly suggest that concessions to the administration be limited to an agreement whereby "students promise to place their gum in its original wrapper". Any further concessions would jeopardize student interests.

Student Welfare Committee members "check the roll" as a meeting is convened in one of the campus bathrooms. The meeting was called by SGA president Tony Slanders (see story) in response to a resolution introduced in the SGA senate. Several interesting discoveries were made during the meeting. (photo: Almost-Mighty Reb)

Action on resolution 'stalled' after meeting

By Ty D. Bowl

The committee meeting was closed to the public. However, one senator commented after the session, "Things got kinda stopped up in there."

"But," another added, "everything came out all right."

Slanders, who chaired the meeting, was asked why the problems had come up. "Well, we had quite a mess to clean up, as you know, but after we wiped out some technicalities, everything went very smooth."

The resolution was reported favorably out of committee and then put before the full senate. A

After holding an impromptu committee meeting in a bathroom, the Student Government Association (SGA) senate Friday delayed action on a resolution declaring the university's bathrooms "discriminatory and asking for reclassification."

The meeting of the Student Welfare Committee was called by SGA president Tony Slanders after the resolution was introduced by three of the more militant female senators.

They charged in the resolution that the men's bathrooms "had a lot more facilities, like those things on the walls, and stuff like that. Be it received that we want the situation corrected. Now!"

Slanders decided to call the committee together then instead of waiting for the scheduled meeting this week because "this is a serious problem that effects, uh, I mean affects every student on this campus. Look, I know this is an irregularity, but we need to get this problem flushed out." heated, lengthy debate erupted almost immediately, with male senators pitted against female senators.

"I would like to add an amendment asking Tony Slanders to stop smiling so much. This is serious business."

"Mr. Chairman, if I may have the floor... why is it that I always get a chair that wobbles?"

"I move that we forbid anyone to bite their fingernails in a senate meeting. It disturbs me."

"I move we move to a bigger room."

"I didn't hear a second."

"Uh, just a second..."

"Passed. So ordered."

"Well, I would like to add that..."

"You're out of order."

"What is your order?"

"Point of order."

"Point of information."

"Pinpoint your point."

"You've got a point."

"It's rude to point."

"Pardon me boy, is that the Chattanooga point?"

After the debate continued for 45 minutes, SGA Vice President Paul Akorn called for a vote: "Now does everyone understand what we're voting on? It is a motion to table a motion to reconsider a vote to table an appeal of ruling that point of order was not in order against a motion to bring to a vote the motion to call up the resolution to change the bathroom classification."

The final vote was 1 for, 1 against and 18 abstaining, leaving the matter to be reconsidered at today's meeting. Another important debate seemed almost certain.

In other SGA action, several benevolent senators stayed after Friday's session to clean up the mess caused after several student spectators threw up violently during the meeting.

Lab for sex class 'swings' open

By "Topsy" Typewriter

University students who enroll in "Human Sexuality," Psychology 325, in the fall of '75, will take part in a special "pilot" project in sex education. According to Dr. George M. Unkempt, chairman of the psychology department and course instructor, laboratory work is to be included in the course content.

Plans are to combine students here with those students enrolled in "Human Sexuality" at the Shreveport Medical Normal School which is taught by well-known Sexologist, Sigmund W. Groovy.

Together, the instructors intend to utilize teaching methods necessary to give the students a learning experience that they will never forget.

"Students learn best by doing," said Groovy. So, by total involvement in the subject matter, study become fun. Because of the party-like atmosphere of the experimental lab, it should be most beneficial to the objectives of the course."

To further make the lab as authentic as possible, the entire group will meet at midnight on Tuesday-Thursdays in an approved romantic setting. Students eventually will be permitted to meet in small groups or pairs. Then, one entire weekend will be used for the comprehensive final.

Additionally, films, guest lecturers and demonstrations will be used at feasible times throughout the semester. All materials available will be on hand to further the goal — fun — of the course. "Topics to be discussed include 'What to take to bed', 365 uses of the water-bed" and group sex," explained Groovy.

Also, there are no attendance requirements and all who try will pass. Each student must provide his own sleeping bag; guests will be checked over by the instructors.

"The only problem as I see it is that of keeping enough textbooks in stock at the bookstore."

Library hours expand under pressure

By Almost-Mighty Reb

Bowling to student pressure Chancellor Didn't He Slip and Head Librarian Snokem Parkedher today announced that the operating hours of the University Library would be expanded starting next semester.

When asked how they had overcome the funding problem that had been given as the reason for not expanding the hours previously, Chancellor Slip replied, "We have come up with a solution that we feel will overcome this problem. In order to finance the increased library hours we have decided to sell the books."

Starting immediately all books on the library shelves will be for sale. The Chancellor said he hopes to get good prices for some the "nice thick big books", but admitted that since some of the books were extremely old they probably wouldn't bring a very good price.

Parkedher stressed that by getting rid of the books, library operations would be greatly simplified. "We won't have the problem of keeping those doggone books in order," he said, "We also won't have the problem of students bothering us about taking them home."

Mr. Parkedher went on to point out that by removing the books they would be able to bring in more desks where students could study and do their research.

The new library hours will be from 4:30 a.m. — 9:30 p.m. Monday-Friday and 3:30 a.m. — 6:00 a.m. Saturday and Sunday. "We will be opened 90 hours a week," said Parkedher. "That should be more than enough time for the students to take care of their petty little research papers."

There are some books, that have been taken off the shelves during the sale, that will remain in the library since as Parkedher says, "A library won't be a library without books." Among the books left in the library will be the complete collection of the Hardly Boys Mysteries. The chancellor is also donating his entire collection of Stuperman Comics.

Chancellor Slip noted that by selling most of the books there won't be a need for as many library staff members even with the additional hours. "This is going to bring us in even more money," he said. The Chancellor was then asked what the money was going to be used for if not for adding more staff members to the library as had been assumed? He replied that this was none of the students business.

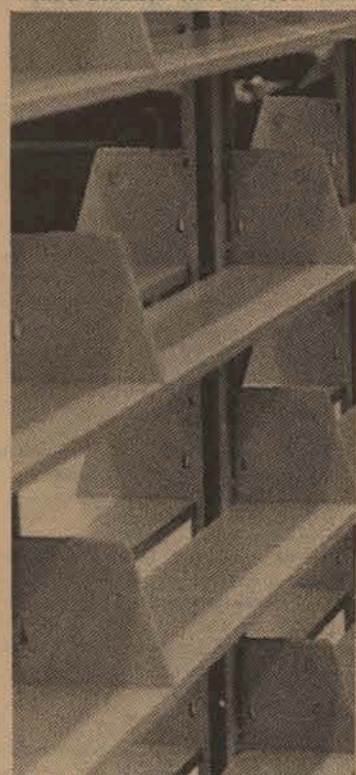

Coed dead

By Chicken Scoop

A 20-year-old coed was found dead today in her car with the motor still running. City Coroner D. Bodee said death was due to starvation.

Campus social security reported seeing the girl drive around for the "last week or so" looking for a parking place. "She left the campus to get gas, and would return within 10 minutes" said one official. "It was sort of pathetic, the way she pressed her nose on the windshield and whimpered as she drove around in circles."

Friends of the girl reportedly offered her food from the "grease shack," but she refused it, saying she'd die first.

Red River bridge stolen

By Topsy Typewriter

University seniors have been charged with criminal mischief, when as a prank, they attempted to steal the Texas Street Bridge and instead caused chaos by immobilizing the Red River with a billion helium-filled ping-pong balls. At last report the white balls had reached Baton Rouge and are expected in the Gulf of Mexico by the weekend.

"Cleverly, the students spent hours building a false bottom to the bridge while others filled the ping-pong balls with helium and placed them in the false bottom," said Police Chief Bobby Dart. "Then, they cut through the steal to disconnect and lower it carefully into the water," he added.

As restitution for the crime he said that each student will be required to "clean-up the Red River or graduation will be cancelled." The seniors involved included many SGA members and the yearbook staff whose names have been withheld for their own protection.

The singer has a fantastic show — complete with the latest in flickering black lights in the famous 7-Up can and with unusual sound effects, rumored to have been recorded during tours on various college campuses.

Some of Blooper's latest hits include: "School's Out for the Winter," "Baby Dolls Die," and "I Love the Morgue."

Grease Shack. "They must have laid down 50 yards of rubber, and were side-by-side, flat out, mowing along up through the golf practice area." Unable to overtake them, Pemes sped between the Library and the Science Building and intercepted them in front of the Library between the water fountain and the decorative cedar bushes.

Later investigation revealed the two had just left the Shack after participating in a hotly contested game of Spades with some of their companions. They have identical dark red Yazoo sport models which they started and headed toward the Library.

"We get this sort of thing each Spring," said Clod Over-louse, social security chief. "With the start of warm weather these types are clipping around the curbs and cutting across lawns, flower beds and so on... We have been after these two for a long time, but their Yazooos are just too hot for us. We were lucky to catch them — they really know how to handle those machines."

Hairiest and Steadyman disclaimed any previous brushes with the law, or that they were speeding as alleged by Pemes. "this is my great aunt's mill," said Steadyman. "It's a dog."

"That's what they all say, but look at the slicks on the rear wheels," said Pemes.

Parachuting Course

There will be a four-week course in the art of parachuting taught by expert skydiver Rip Cord beginning next week. The first three weeks will be devoted to lecture on the history and the fundamentals of operating a parachute.

The last week of the course will give the students practical experience in the use of the parachute. The class will meet for that week on the roof of the Science building.

Diving Championship

There will be a special Intramurals Swimming and Diving Championship the end of this month, the Intramurals Office announced today. In the absence of a regulation swimming pool, the competition will take place in the fountains between the Science and Liberal Arts buildings.

"We realize that the space in the fountains is somewhat limited," said an IM spokesman, "but we feel that this will be good for the competition because the quality of the entrants will be higher. Just anyone is not an expert at swimming in fountains."

Entrants in the diving category will be asked to provide their own crash helmets.

Demolition Derby

The University parking lot was the scene last week of a demolition derby that began when five students tried to get into one parking space.

The campus security guards attempted to break up the confusion, failed, and then turned the problem over to the Intramurals office who staged the derby. Trophies were given for second and third places. The winner was awarded the parking space. The IM office announced that the derby was so successful, that they will make it an annual event.

Play Stinketh

By Dorothy Kildalen

The opening night performance "When Ya Leavin' Blu Snyder?" at the Trap Door — formerly the Beverly Hay Loft — was an undeniable success.

P.D. Beare and Jolly Castle, as Randy and Pat Klingman, and Marcus Magee and Judy Punch, as Blue and Goldie Fawn, are well cast as the couples who venture to the wilds of south Louisiana for a four-day vacation. Unfortunately, many people in the audience thought it was a four-night vacation and slept throughout the performance undisturbed.

The couples encounter such catastrophes as closed all-night 6-7 stores, ragin' cajuns, sea urchins and sand dollars. The climax of the vacation and the play is the unguided tour through the Chacahoula Swamp. The hilarious production ends as the couples prepare to settle down for their last night in beautiful Louisiana only to be attacked by the ever present mosquitoes.

The high-note comedy, artfully directed by Deaux U. Belevit, utilizes unusual technical effects which include insects, smog and eerie lighting. The soggy carpet — typical of the swampland — was a bit much but the crawfish seemed to find it quite comfortable.

Words cannot describe this original production — you must experience it.

Goldberg Review

By Tex Goldberg

Howdy neighbors, it's me your old buddy Tex Goldberg back again with another one of my bodacious record reviews. This week we get us a real dozy of an album by that great country group Ernest Trobadore and his Texas Tubs called "Finger Licken Picken." Anyone who appreciates good country music is sure gonna git a kick outta this un.

Recorded in good old Ida, Lousianer on the Chicken Peck lable good ole Ern has mixed in some brand new tunes with a bunch of his old favorites like, "I Got Holes IN My Britches From Kneelin On the Floor and Prayin You'll Come Back To Me," and "I Been Cryen Every Day Since You Went Away," both tender ballads about a man and his hounddog.

There are some real snappy new tunes like, "I'm Havin Fits Since I Ain't Had My Grits" and "Since Your No Longer There I Lost My Underwear" which features a gitar solor by that good ole boy Hack Strumless, who has added a forth cord to his repatorie.

All in all this here album is simply fantabulous and should be enjoyed by all.

No Respect

By Almost-Mighty Reb

A major problem many face when choosing a religion is which religion is the correct one. What happens if you commit yourself to one religion then find out that another was right?

For example, suppose you commit yourself to christianity and die happily expecting to just zoom on up to heaven only to discover the Jews were right all along. And that the guy you devoted your life to was just another great magican with a father-god complex.

If this problem bothers you, take heart for there is a religion that takes this under consideration. The Reformed Orthodox Druids (ROD) have solved this problem by committing themselves to nothing. They neither support nor reject the beliefs of any other religions.

A cop out you say? We that are associated with the R.O.D. movement don't feel so. We will commit ourselves as soon as one theory is shown to be absolutely the right theory. The problem is that the only people who could say for sure are those that have died, and so far we have found no way of interviewing them.

The next question that probably pops in your mind is if you don't believe in anything why have a religion at all. The answer to this is simple. Why Not? Besides Reformed Orthodox Druids believe in a lot of things, it's just that we refuse to stand up for them.
